2014 was a good year to be eating in San Diego (well, actually, they all are, because... burritos!) But did you make it the BEST it could be? If you tried all 11 of these new restaurants, odds are you did pretty well for yourself. Here they are, the best new restaurants in San Diego from this year.

TIDAL

Tidal

Mission Bay

Built in what used to be a private beach house in the '60s, Tidal sits on the shore of Paradise Point Resort & Spa, with incredible views of Mission Bay and the Coronado Bridge. Chef Amy DiBiase's menu consists mostly of perfectly executed seafood dishes with Mediterranean influences, but there are also delightful land-based options like the half-chicken confit – which is wood-roasted and served with cauliflower, heirloom carrots, and a Madeira reduction.
